

Prostitution

We need better enforcement of the law, more survivor supports, more public education, and better strategies to protect women and girls from prostitution.

Canada has a good law to tackle prostitution...

Canada's current prostitution law, the Protection of Communities and Exploited Persons Act (PCEPA), recognizes that prostitution is inherently exploitative and harmful. The law targets pimps, johns, and other exploiters. It does not criminalize prostitutes. The goal of PCEPA is to abolish prostitution to the greatest extent possible.

How is prostitution harmful?

- > Harm #1: Prostitution dehumanizes people, particularly women and girls. It treats them as objects for sexual satisfaction rather than as human beings with inherent dignity.
- > Harm #2: Prostitution commodifies sex, making this intimate act intended for marriage something to be bought and sold.
- > Harm #3: Prostitution generates a demand for sex trafficking. This has been well documented in academic literature and recent court decisions.
- > Harm #4: Prostitution is violent and unhealthy. Those who have been trapped in prostitution report regular instances of violence and experience many psychological issues.

Profile of Prostituted Women and Girls in Canada

Average age of entry into prostitution	14-19
Current typical age	20-24
Percentage addicted to drugs or alcohol	68%
Percentage needing mental health support	52%
Percentage coerced to provide sexual services	67%
Percentage wanting to leave prostitution	81%

For more information on this issue, check out ARPA Canada's policy report on prostitution

info@arpacanada.ca | 1866.691.2772
130 Albert Street, Suite 1705,
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5G4

Follow us on:

To learn more please visit:
ARPACANADA.ca